5. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow : 3×5=15

Revolutions are not made by fate but by men. Sometimes they are solitary men of genius. But the great revolutions in the eighteenth century were made by many lesser men banded together. What drove them was the conviction that every man is master of his own salvation. We take it for granted now that science has a social responsibility. That idea would not have occurred to Newton or Galileo. They thought of science as an account of the world as it is, and the only responsibility that they acknowledged was to tell the truth. The idea that science is a social enterprise is modern, and it begins at the Industrial Revolution. We are surprised that we cannot trace a social sense further back, because we nurse the illusion that the Industrial Revolution ended a golden age.

The Industrial Revolution is a long train of changes starting about 1760. It is not alone : it forms one of a triad of revolutions of which the other two were the American Revolution that started in 1775, and the French Revolution that started in 1789. It may seem strange to put into the same bracket an industrial revolution and two political revolutions. The Industrial revolution is simply the English way of making those social changes. It can be referred to as the English Revolution.

- (i) What belief was the driving force behind the eighteenth century revolutions ?
- (ii) What was Newton's and Galileo's concept of science and the scientists' duty ?
- (iii) Which other revolutions took place about the time of the Industrial Revolution ? What factor is common to all of them ?
