Goethe has ingeniously compared Shakespeare's characters to watches with crystalline plates and cases. It is further said that Shakespeare's mind in the horizon beyond which we do not at pregent see. His dreams appeal to all shades of people. So his dramas are popular with the gallery as well as with the stalls, with the village audience in a barn as with an audience of academies. This does not however mean that Shakespeare did not borrow the materials of his dramas from others. He found the plots of his dramas as dry bones but when in his hands the witch entered the bones and breathed the breath of life.
